

(Oh, yes, they did.)

And there's no--I kinda took issue with that. I don't--I don't believe they hardly went as far as Iowa, did they?

(I never heard of them going out to that direction.)

This is up around Omaha I believe is where he is from.

(Well, now, Arkansas and Texas and the Oklahoma or Indian Territory then, they were pretty well scattered through there.)

Uh-huh, well, now, there's some of the Gunters that went up into Missouri, but they weren't Indians. They was one of the descendants of the other side-- get all the information he could. He was writing up some part of the family history.

(Mmm-hmmm.)

Now, then, there is a fellow--I believe he's in Bartlesville, and his first name is Gunter Lane, Gunter Lane. He was writing up a big family history. He probably knows where all those cemeteries are. You done got Rogers County in here though, haven't you?

(Not--it'll be in the next group, uh-huh.)

MORE ABOUT CEMETERIES

Well, what's the--what's this White Oak cemetery called over here? It's a little cemetery. Somebody has stolen some of those stones.

(Oh, yeah, I've had---)

Well, what could they do with them after they steal them?

(Some of these monument companies will buy those stones. They'll cut off that one inch of the engraving and sent some one else a brand new stone.)

Oh, no.

(That is the tradition our country's in today. We have people of that breeding.)

For Heaven Sake.
