

(Who were some of the early families that you remember or heard about that lived in here? Let's see, there'd be the Andersons and Hoffmans.)

I don't remember anything about any of the Crosslands. But there's some that's still lives around Fort Gibson here. My wife can probably tell you more about them than I can.

(Yeah.)

'Cause she--her--my son's wife used to have some of the Crossland's baby sit for them. And I'm pretty sure it's some of the offspring.

AN ABANDONED VILLAGE - ARROW HEAD FOUND

(Sure. Well, there's a little village here of -- )

And again right down there, now, the boys used to come out here and hunt arrow heads, right along down yonder. They could go there after that fresh ground up and after a rain and they could find them Indian arrow heads, you know, and --

(Well, then, there must have been an old Indian village there at one time.)

Yeah, that's right.

(Well.)

These guy always getting out bermuda grass, and it would be hard to--it'd be an accident if you could ever find one now.

STAGE COACH LINE IN EARLY DAYS

(Now, was this -- at one time was there a stage coach line went through here from here to -- )

Yes, uh-huh.

(And where was the stage station then? Was it up here where the store is or -- ?)

You mean, where was -- which way did it come to?
