

RABBIT TRAP SCHOOL

(Sometime when you're up here you can go in and talk to him (irrelevant conversation) Now he's know about this up there.

(That Rabbit Trap school is that an old place there?)

Yeah, it is pretty old.

(That's not the original building that was there though?)

No. I remember when the other old building. They built this along about, you know, WPA did.

(Yeah.)

(Irrelevant conversation)

(Part of these roads got so bad when the Deep Fork been here. You couldn't hardly get over'em. This was real good road. It just got to where you couldn't hardly get through.

(Yeah.)

Couldn't have been over, say, ten or eleven years old. I was at that old Dollar Graveyard. And there was people there, buried there, there was marker been buried there 50, 75 years before then.

(Well. That's pretty well 150 years.)

Its ond of the old, very oldest here in this country.

(Yeah.)

Way back when--Civil War days, you know. And I know some of the people that's buried there..

(That's good.)

Some of the ones that's later.

(Well, now all this whole country was thickly settled, I guess, at one time.)

Oh yeah. I can take you to old house, places, Jim, that I guess--well people lived there before the Civil War.
