

Oh, we had a bunch of 'em. Dad would take a train load of cattle there one time.

(Well.)

That's the biggest crowd I ever seen.

SCHOOLS IN EARLY DAYS

(I would liked to have lived and seen the town in that day. It would have really been something to remember. What were your schools here in-- when you were going to school?)

Mrs. Garvin: Well, I first started to school--well I just went a few days in the old church house down there that they tore down and rebuilt it. But statehood built the school house up on the side of the mountain. And I don't know whether anybody told you about that or not.

(No.)

Mrs. Garvin: But I went to school my first year there. Before that then-- I thought they had another school house down there way back when I was going.

Mrs. Garvin: Yeah, that was the Indian school over there, you know. Well, they wouldn't let the white students come in there.

Mrs. Garvin: No, that was--what do you call it? It was over there-- John Rogers was a teacher. He was an Indian too.

Mrs. Garvin: Where did the white people go to school? I remember Mama saying she had to pay a nickel a day to go to school. They didn't have white people here.

Mrs. Garvin: No. They went to school, but they might have just had-- might had just congregated at somebody's house. I don't know.

(I've heard of that. Yes.)

Mrs. Garvin: I don't know. I really just don't remember.

They had a big, old long straight plank.

(What did you do for church service or did you have a church?)
