

(Well, that's been my experience to (not clear), is it still in (not clear). )

No, this is an old school building.

(Oh, this is it, uh-huh.)

EARLY DAY SCHOOLS ABANDONED AFTER STATEHOOD

And they transferred that -- the government, see, condemned all this land. Well, that's what many families out -- . This was -- when we come here and after him -- well, clear up in the early fifties, it had four years of high school.

(Well, that's interesting.)

But, yes, the government took all the oil fields (not clear), and everything west of here is gone. They just took out so many families. They cut her down on the attendance there. We couldn't (?) have a school, rather a good school. So, they -- Chelsea, we had access to Chelsea. We went there. All the kids gone town now.

(Well, now, was this about the -- center of the oil field?)

Yeah, it was. Somewhere in this vicinity. They had an oil field north, south, east and west.

(Well, let's see, across the river would be more of a prairie land, prairie country, as compared to -- .)

Yeah, right across there. You get on top of that hill over there in the prairie. Then, you could see oil field there. And, of course, it gets into -- there used to be an old school. There's a community over there, two miles other side of the river known as High Play. Of course, the buildings all gone now. Wiganon has been fortunate to survive.

(It surely has.)

As well as we have. There's been so many things taken away from us, but we still progress as little community. We get running water now. And, got
