

It was always a Kelley school. Then, we had (not clear). But these oil fields and all in here, we had -- they was big school. One of the (not clear) .

(They must have been -- .)(Interruption.)

-- We had four years of high school. It was -- oh, there's lot of people there (not clear) oil field workers, and farmers too. Use to, you know, they'll farm a hundred and sixty acres and forty-nine thousand farm.

(You bet it was.)

Now, gosh, it's just too much, right to the garden path.

(Yeah.) (Static.)

-- I guess, and so on. A fellow might find a few things out here on the Nickleson Ford.

(Hmmm, Nickle Ford.)

Nickleson.

(Nickleson.)

They would have -- an old Indian cemetery (not clear). There's no marker, and some of the old timers told me they can't tell me where because they can find -- oh, where the Indians work rock, you know, made flint, arrowheads. Once in a while, I'll find an arrowhead. And, then, my brother-in-law said, he told me at least, (not clear -- background noise) -- I knew where it was, but he didn't say so.

(Was it in the Oologah reservation?)

Yeah, yeah, it's still on high ground.

(End of Interview.)
