

And, then, after that. Then, after that, well, before I went to "domestic science", well, I went, I went to the bank to work. I went to work in the bank.

(Oh, they had a bank.)

Uh-huh, I went down there. I was pretty good there, too. (Laughter)

(Well, besides your domestic science where you learned cooking, did they, what else did you study like -- )

That's all.

(Mathematics or English, reading, writing, or -- )

Well, we had to go to there.

(Oh, you learned all that?)

Um-hmm, yeah, everything. They send them to Washington, the papers.

And this here boy--this here Wylie what I'm talking about. He took his last go 'round 'till his wife died. He stayed there. He went back.

(Oh, he went back as a teacher?)

No, I think he must have been a, I don't know what he was. He was kinda-- I never did ask Wylie what he was.

(But he got married and went back up there?)

He was--he took his wife with him. And he took his whole family. He had family, didn't he?

Unidentified voice: Uh-huh.

He went back there.

(But he worked there. He did something.)

Yeah, he worked there, and, then, he lost his wife, I think. She died out there, didn't she?

Unidentified voice: Uh-hmm.

Then, he brought her back--went blind.
