

Somebody-- I remember when I was a kid used to have 'em up there in the old Pioneer building across the road First National Bank. Have them Delaware meetings. And they'd get up there and get in line and they'd let it get of hand. Then after while some more stuff come up, you know, they'd have another meeting. One time they had it down at the fairground. And there was an old man down there that was a registered Delaware. That was old John Falleaf. Had on a great big long fur coat and fur hat.

(Well.)

And there was just a few registered Delawares left and he didn't want to see all Cherokee Delawares. He just wanted say Delaware. He went for three years. He didn't (word not clear) Wanted 'em to call Cherokee Delawares. Judge Shelton (?) was the one that brought it all on. Just the few Delawares left.

JOHN FALLEAF

(Was old George Falleaf, was he Fred's daddy?)

No.

(His uncle?)

Yeah. His dad's name was John.

(Yeah, that's right.)

John Falleaf. And old George was one of the older brothers. He had several brothers. I'll never forget this old man. He was dressed in a big old fur coat. It come down passed his knees. Had on one of them round fur hats, you know, doesn't have any bill. He like to wear that among all. He was a registered Delaware. He wanted to get that money and not give to everybody. But he died (rest of sentence not clear). Look like it would have gone their way.

PREPARING DRIED CORN

(It is now, yeah. How did they fix that dried corn? There must be a secret.)
