

it got cold. Real cold. And she climb the mountain way up high. And she this mountain was just full of cedar trees. She didn't know what to do.
 She had a big knife with her. That man's knife. She climb up there and cut cedar trees. She made a little house out like that you know. Like arbors. It got so cold and she got hungry and she went down. Went down the mountain and she kept going, going, and she come into big cave.
 And she went in-----and when she went in she sit down. And after a while something growled at her. And she---"Don't hurt me!" She talk to this.
 And it was big bear. And the mama and this other big bear too. And she said, "Don't hurt me you all, don't hurt me. I'm just lost and its cold and I have to come and I'm really cold." And she went in and they growled at her and they hit her and they rolled over and just hit her and they just treat her mean you know. And finally they got used to her and she talked to them, you know, "Don't do that. Don't hit me. I'm sick, I don't feel good." Finally they got tame, you know. These two bears, they got tame. And then she lived there with them. They would go out and they would bring something, like a deer or anything to eat. They would bring it up there where she stays. And she would go out and get wood and pile it up and when it gets cold she would build a fire, and get warm, with that. And these bears, they were way back in the cave and finally she....this mama bear died. Well, she got married to this bear and he lived with her long many years. I don't know how many years finally she had little bear. She had three little bears. From this bear.....the one living with. So they were born and they were little bears and they just cry around and she would pet them and she would carry them. Finally it got spring time and she said, "Oh, I believe I'll just leave them and go on." That's what she said to herself. So she got deer skin and she made dress out of it. She made a skirt out of it.
