

these lakes. They're the ones who are in business. A good example of that is: The Warm Springs Indians in Oregon have went into recreational business. Now, their business went so fast that it's a real successful thing for the Indians. You take right now, is the right time. Then, after I went before Commissioner Bruce, and I went up to see Mr. Harry Shoeshan, who is in charge of all the resources and a good friend of mine in Washington, he told me, then, that was one of the best ideas that he has heard of, and he directed me right there immediately to go to the Secretary of the Interior, and not only that, he is the superintendent and Mr. Joe Krobie were with me at that time. We went to talk with the Secretary of the Interior. We did talk to Mr. Morris Thompson, who is the Secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, and he was very much pleased about it. He said that was one of the finest ideas that have been brought up to him in regards to the Indians owning this shore line. And I think we should explore that a great deal more because this thing in 20-25 years from now will be a real important thing for the young Indian people to get into, and to run everything that pertains to recreation. (Well, we were vitally concerned, you know, just like you say, about our income. That's what we're mostly concerned with. Like you say, some fellow with one headright, he just can't live on that headright anymore.)

He's on a policy level. Yes, he is, and I stated that in my platform too. I think, Leonard, what we got to do and if we elect the right council and the Chief who is going to represent, you have got to be thinking in bigger ways than we have ever thought before because now
