

simple. They're--they have to do with everyday life. It's a good thing. Well, we have some bad things too--violations. Now we violate these rules, there's no penalty, no fine, no money involved. But the white man as soon as you break a law, you got have the dollar. You got to have the money. Money is the object of the whole universe. Now anymore, therefore, I say we got so many laws now you just might as well pay off everytime you make a mistake. You can't go fishing without a license, You can't go hunting without a license. You can't get married without a license, and you can't go with a girl unless you have some money. I don't know, money is just coming and going. It's just getting to where I don't like that. I don't like them ways. The freedoms gone. We have no freedom anymore. Like the first time my grandpa told me about the white peoples coming to this country, he predicted, he foresaw all what I'm telling you what's going to happen--that's happening now. I set here and see the cars going by. I see the airplanes; I see the jets going over. I see the television. Going too fast. Too fast. Therefore, I say these laws--I guess you even got laws in the scattersphere, up in the orbit, they got law. They probably have some collisions out there too. And they probably gonna make laws there for that. There's law everywhere. Even under the sea. With them submarines. They have laws. Certain Russian got out of line, and especially now in Jerusalem, they have a little conflict about a certain line over there. Therefore, I say these laws are just too much. Too many laws. We violate them every minutes. Every second, there's one of them been violated. And their political machine of their leaders--
