

hill, the biggest rock, the biggest trees, things like that, you know. Course, they don't worship them, but only God, you know, made them. He's just like that. He's almighty. He's Big God. That's the way our people believed that way. That's, anyway, whenever they see a hill, they like to get on top of it and worship God. (Laughter) Get as high as they can so they can get near to God, I guess. So that's the way it is.

(Well, seems like they certainly back there, people had great faith.)

Yeah, uh-huh.

(Seems like they, well, I imagine, they had to have something like that to survive, you know.)

Yeah. (Static)

(It's amazing how well the Indians conducted themselves in their way of life, you know, every day life, from their birth until they die.)

Yes, they, I believe, cause the way the old people tell us about their ancestors. You know, it's, they're guided by the Great Spirit, see, Almighty God. See, when they first came here, why, they were instructed by this certain man or somebody that brought them here. And he instructed them how to conduct their lives, and how to live, and how to make these shelter for themselves, and how to get these what kind of a wood, to use for tipi poles and all that things and stuff. Well, and this man instructed them along every line of their life. And moral and everything about their life. They were instructed, they were guided and lead by someone, see. See, they didn't went about just like other people they talk about in Africa and those places. They were guided people. They lived their own lives, you know. Of course, they were wrong. They're mistaken. Now, what's going on today, savagery in the universities, you know. I used to consider them, I used to respect those people. Now, I, things changed, you know. People, they're different. They're supposed to know better.
