

Indians. Now, I'm think about Going Snake. And many, many other Indians Rabbit Bunch, James Vann and William Summer. There is a lot of 'em no one knows a thing about. That is what I wanted to do, is find out all I can about them. And record them briefly.) (Interruption.)

(Her name is Flora Beesly, and she lives in these old stack houses. I don't know, it's a pink house is all I know. Where the allotted lot of stack houses out here.)

Yes.

(On that reservation area, out there by the river?)

Ah-hum. Well, she claims, well, at her old place, your old sight, you know where the Sam's corner is?

(Yes!)

Sam's corner, you know where that road that goes to Cedar Creek.

(Ah-huh)

Well, let's see. There is a store there, use to be, they call it Compton's store. Well, it still there on towards the year, Bob.

(Yeah.)

Well, I say from that store about another half a mile, she could described it to you a little more accuracy. Because her house was sitting on a hill, and the grave site is right there. It's right in there. It's been there when I was.

(Well.)

But there is one right in that location.

(I'll find it.)

People around there, Cobblers he'd know it. And he's been there years and years. Cobblers, Charles Cobblers, I think. Is his name. Or on that store. And that grave yard, I know has to be Cherokee. Because it's on her land.

(On her land.)
