

(Well, did you want to rest a little while?)

Oh, I don't mind it.

(Well, we can rest a few minutes, and we can start again.)

~~Monotonous-hummon.~~ (Interruption) There's a story and told, I heard it. It says, (pauses for a long time)....the other way, why, two boys and one girl, (pauses again) two boys went off with another girl. And one night this girl (static) this man. This young man's tent, instead of going in, she looked in through the open (static) and noticed that this man was (static) brothers and sisters and just quarreling with his father and mother. And this mother says, "Well, you must be hungry. We saved you some meat." So she set some meat before him, and he was mad at his father (static) out. And happened to throw it to the door where this girl was standing. And this girl picked it up and wrapped it around in her handkerchief or something, took it home. And went to the other boy's tent. When she went in and looked in there, well, everything was peaceful, happy. Everyone was just friendly, loved one another. Sister's combing brother's hair, and they were kind to one another, good peaceful home. See, now, she knew the difference between these two homes. One, you know, nobody had love for one another. The other one's peace, kind, gentle, and love one another. That's the kind of men they were these two. And on account of this, one man they called bad, and the other one good. That's the way the story went, see. Anyway, it happened that these two had to go on a war party, go on a war path. And they both had to go, and they were gone about a day, and this young lady followed them. Course, it's not like this now, that not what I mean, you know, but the girls were just like men, young men, them days. They can go out and get a power from anything, you know, just like a young man. And that's the story anyhow, anyway, they went out in battlefield, and they,
