

while he was trying to pull, keep the enemy back, why, he came and cut the bowstring. The story, I don't know the details can't remember. He took half of it now. They trust his best friend, but his best friend cut his bow string, you know. (Laughter) That's the, and then he says, "Well," he says, "when you get home, why, tell him that Tukali (spelled phonetically)." That's a name. Now, we have some songs that we people sing in these hand games, you know, that "Give it away, some of it", they call it. After they get one game, well, they sing one of them. Well, this is the same as the Tukali (?) song, they call it. And he was taken, he was captured, taken prisoner, and that night, in night, why during that night, well, this woman, went around all over those bodies lying around. Some still alive, some sitting up mourning. Her sweetheart wasn't there, but she went, she went to the camp, and she heard that sweetheart singing Tukali, singing songs, you know. And then she knew that he was still alive. And then she went to the first tent, there's an old lady living there, and the first thing, you know, they think about is that they're on the outs for their husbands or something like that, you know. She says, "I have some food here, that you can have," and placed it before her. Instead of eating, you know, she took it. They talk, they talk or something, you know, and she wrapped that whatever it was that the old lady gave her. She wrapped it up just like a cradle and she wrapped it like a baby cradle. And she went out with that on her arms. And she went on the outside, putting her baby to sleep. And the people were out there dancing for some reason, having a victory dance out there, you know. And they had this man tied to a stake, got a fire in front of him, you know. I don't know what they're going to do with him, but anyway, he was tied to a stake. And then, these two guards there were asleep. Oh, they must be sitting around there
