

much attention. Every time they glanced over their toward him, there'd be a deer sitting over there, you know. It was him, that old man, you know. He was trying to fight against that, you know, power, medicine. But he was all right. He got all right. That's first time, some one know of him to be that way. That's the one I wanna tell. They used to have doings way down, way Arkansas River. There's a place down there straight almost, no, not exactly straight east, oh, about three. Anyways, two, three miles south down there in the woods. Nice place there, big trees, shady, flat ground, nice place, they'd have their doings there. They have all their doings there, hand games, dances, and Christmas camp and that's where they had a hand games. They have a hand game on day time. They don't have them at nights like they do now, like...

INCIDENT ABOUT A MAN WALKING ALONG SIDE THE ROAD

Yeah, they have them day time, and they have one what they call Big Hand Game on Sundays, Sunday afternoon. They don't have them at night time. And they don't have just one hand game, sticks, for that big hand game, because there are some, but there was, they hold them pretty sacred then days. And nowadays, every home have a hand game stick now. But them days it wasn't allowed. It wasn't that way. So they had a hand game down there that Sunday and coming back you know, it was the last days of horses and buggy days. I remember we went down there. Coming back, I noticed a man walking on the side of the road. And I say, they offered him a ride. They told him, "Oh, this guy's got a lot of room here. You better get in." "No, no, cause, no, I wanna walk." Well, he began walking. Even those people that lives over here, we call them (not clear) down here, you know, that's where he was living. And then, those folks that come
