

you know. (Laughter) Yeah, even what you eat, you know, they make fun of you. Well that's the way it was them days. But, now, it's different. In the old days, they discouraged all that. They have a, in their, that is Comanche meat, course, they have all those exercises and all during the week. And they put on, instead of putting on some kind of Indian pageant, they put on opera, opera in them days. Yeah. They have a good choir, young boys and girls, you know, been trained to sing certain parts you know, different parts and act. They work on it. Just like going to, you pay to go to a theater and listen. That's the way it was them days, you know. Good teachers are good trainers. And they put on, I remember, oh, there's one, there's one they put on, they call it Macatta (?). You know, boy, that's a wonderful play. Boy, they got that just, costumes and everything and even the Indians, they looked Chinese. (Laughter) Yeah, we get visitors from Arkansas City, Winfield, and all over to see us. There's one night, you know, for the students and one night for the visitors. Yeah, Macatta (?). And they have a place taken from that English writer. What's his name?

(Shakespeare?)

Shakespeare, uh-huh, yeah. And just like you see in an opera, that's the way, that's the way we been trained them days. No Indian play, or no nothing about Indians. Yeah, that's what, what it was them days, you know. No Indian stuff, all put outside. And nowadays, you know, I heard they have an Indian Club.

(Yeah) (Laughter)

Yeah, learn to talk Indian instead of learning to talk English. And they have them, during the commencement week, we have band concerts and athletic events. This athletic events, you know, we don't compete with outside.
