

They still have the Hudson Creek School.

(They do!)

It's still there. But, it's a Trading Post. I don't know whether it's down there. I don't know who told me, but they told that grandma was killed by a bunch of hostile Indians at the Hudson Trading Post.

(Well.)

I don't know how true that is. Course, all of them have, you know, how, you run into all this. But hear one time and hear another.

(You find all different versions of the same old story.)

And so, you just really don't know which one to pick. And you just kinda, have to put down a little bit of each one them.

(Yeah, that's right, you don't dare, say that it didn't happen, Because, so many thing did happen that seem so unusual. Or out of the ordinary.)

But she had went down there, to trade something. I don't know the way they told us. and anyhow, they got into these bunch of Indian got into a fight or something. And I guess, she was in the line of bows and arrows, or shots, or something.

(Ah-huh)

I don't know. And was killed. They said.

(Well)

So.

(In your time, Mrs. Murphy who, do you remember as the early day settler, or early day families in that little area of Hudson Creek? Were the Sparkman one of them?)

Yeah, and them. They are our kinfolks.

(Yeah.)

(not clear) Justin.
