

He used to pay me twenty dollars a week. I used to get twenty dollars a week, but I used to get my pay every two weeks.

(That was pretty good back then.)

Yeah, that was good. I used to go over there. Sometimes I'd wash all the bottles when they come in and then I'd put them in place where they belong.

And I used to clean that office. Until he moved. I used to work for him.

(Talking about breast feeding a child, how often would they feed the child-- let it nurse?)

I don't think they give a time for it. Every time the baby hollers, they feed it. (Laughs) That's the truth. Every time the baby would just now move around, they already had it out. (breast out to feed baby) Maybe you think I always just tell you things--but I tell you straightly the truth about these Indians! How they used to do and what they used to do. I don't just make up things. I kind of got scared when they said that man was saying I was too openly telling about Indians. Yeah. Oh, I said, "Well, it's my business."

(Was that lately or some time ago?)

Some time ago that woman was telling me. And that's why I said, "Oh, I don't want to go, because Jess (Rowlodge) might be there. He might say something to me. Yeah, I guess he said, "She just tells everything. She don't hide nothing," I guess he said. "Well, what's the use of hiding it?" I said. "Is he ashamed of the way he was living when he was a young man?" You know this old lady in town--you know her--that was his girl friend. He used to come up here, you know. He used to be with her. And I think they was going to get married, and he went and married a younger woman.

(You mean his second wife?)

No--his first wife. I thought that was going to be his first wife. They were
