

(Yeah.)

And his grandmother lived there. Three men rode up a horse-back, rode fine horses, well-dressed. He said one of them was a little bitty fellow and one of them was a big thing. Said the other wasn't quite so big. And he said they asked grandma if she could fix them something to eat, but she did, and grandpa said he just knew--and she said they eat dinner, fed their horses, and they said they never said a word, said when they got through eating, why, this little fellow, grandpa said, he wore a big black hat, and he give my grandmother a twenty dollar bill. Grandpa said he just a little old kid, he never heard nobody call his name. So he said when they left, there used to be a crossing in the river, Caney River is right there behind that house. And he said there was a kind of a crossing down there, rode down there and crossed and was right straight back, west of the bottom. Oh, he said they didn't go into the house. So grandpa called him again. Edward said did you ever see those people before. And we told him no. He said grandma that's the first time I ever seen them. She said, well he said they done gone now, and they won't be back, but I'll tell you who it was. He said that was Jesse James and Cole Younger and Jess' younger brother. That was the three. And grandpa said he heard of them all the time, but he said that the first time he ever saw them he said Jesse James was a little man, little bitty, fellow and he said Cole Younger was the big thing. Grandpa said they was well-dressed. He said they had Winchesters sticking out of them saddle belts. Yeah, he said there's who they were.

(What was your daddy's name?)

His name was Eddie.

(Your grandfather also?)