

And they would say what did you call that, she'll give an official name, and then she'll give the name they know by. And three years ago, Memorial Day we went down to Durant and in there and we got some flowers and they told us. Now, I mean even down there, they didn't know what they were, didn't even tell I don't guess. But she too went to that lady that wrote that book. Bert, well she wrote that wild fire book and she said that. I just get so far sometimes and I can't think. I'm so sorry about it. (Well, I tell you whatever effort that when one is able to devote to that kind, is certainly well worth the time. Because so many people know absolute nothing.)

Oh, no!

(I try to teach my children even though they are grown and got families of their own, and we're raising a little boy now. And I want him all to know some the things of nature.),

Visiting, I hate to go worse than anything to Hot Springs or anything else, to let my child will say, "Mommy will go with that car."

(Surely.)

I get off work and go take them, and, but I would rather for them to remember that, than anything else.

(That's right. But this day of changing time and attitude there is a lot of do thing before and a lot of responsibilities rest on someone collective now too.)

Yes!

(Children don't become dissentient and off on their own, by themselves they have to have something leads them or keep them from doing thing of let them do things and it falls back on the elders.)

If they permit things to happen or if they use a strong arm to--to prevent
