

(Well, do people raise cane, sugar cane anymore?)

No. We raised it in here. And like I said we made molasses.

(Yeah.)

And then just like everything else it took all afternoon to cook.

(I guess it does. It must be a job.)

It sure is.

(I've heard older people tell how they made it. And said they had to stay right there with it all the time it cooked.)

Yeah. Skim it, you know.

OLD FARM TOOLS-OLD CHURNS-BUTTER MOLDS

(Yeah. Well, that's like so many other things that have disappeared and gone that people used to know about.)

Yeah.

(Well, lot of old home tools and things that you used to use in the house and kitchens are all gone now.)

Yeah.

(Old churns and butter molds and things like that. Log saws, cross-cut saws. You don't see 'em anymore.)

No, there's a man right over here, Millard Morrison. He has been raised here. 'Course he's hard of hearing and very near blind. And he's had his hips broke last year. And he just can't get along hardly. Before he did he done blacksmith work.

(Yes.)

And he was hunting a wide cross-cut saw. He was going to make a hoe out of it. You think he could find one?

(I don't guess there's any anywhere. I don't know where you'd look for one.)

No...he couldn't never find one.
