

(If you were talking about your older brother to someone else, how would you refer to him?)

Well, I would have to say nae.sae'hae

(O.K. Well, what about--Chester and Angus have a sister--Woman-Walking-First-- what would you call her?)

nae'hae.ba'ehae

(That's the same thing as--well, was Woman-Walking-First younger than you or older than you?)

Younger.

(What if she was older, what would you call her

nε'bi

(And if you were talking about your older sister to someone else, how would you refer to her?)

Same thing -- nε'bi

(Are there any rules about talking to your sisters, like there are about talking to your brother?)

Yeah, sisters, they talk to each other. And brothers, they talk. But they weren't supposed to talk to their sisters and we're not supposed to talk with our brothers.

(Well, when you were small, how did you learn this? Did your grandmother or people that raised you tell you that you weren't supposed to?)

Yeah. They learn us. They told us not to talk to them or anything. We used to just have to stay clear away from them and not get around them. It wasn't like the way it is now. You see sisters and brothers hand in hand on the street. It wasn't like that.

(Was that hard to follow in some ways?)

Yeah, it was all right to be in the same tent, but we didn't have words between each other.
