

And that's the way I understand. I never talk to him. Once in a great while I'll get to talk to him. We still believe in old fashion way, me and him. We don't hardly talk, we'll talk to our brothers but you sit there and joke with them and laugh with them. We don't do that. I just meet him in a nice way and he'll just ask me how I'm getting along and all that. I'll do the same thing for him, and then he'll say well take care of yourself, take care of yourself you're not well. I'll see you again. And then he'll go on, but now days everything's different. They'll go along with their brothers and they all we always talk it and they go out and they have a good time with they're brothers in the same group. We don't do that way back there and that's the way we are me and my cousin, James Archie. We don't, we were raised that way and we still stand it that way, and whenever he's camped any place or whenever he's somewhere I don't go over there and bother him. There's a lot of respect way back when you got a brother or when you got a cousin. That's the way my mother and my uncle, see that's my mother's brother's son. My mother and my uncle had the same mother and.. Well I guess that was old people's beliefs of how they was raised from way back there. That's just the way our parents used to tell us, set us down and tell us from right and wrong about our brothers because ah, they always say that it's embarrassing and shame to sit around and talk with your brother and carry on jokes. We don't even get out and play among the little ones you know. And my brother be in then we be playing with the bunch we don't do that. They don't let us do that. We have to kanda be separated from them because they always say that it's unpolite and embarrassing to be seen there playing with your brother. That it's not right because people has no respect for you if you're doing that. Or going some place with a brother and sister going somewhere, well the people don't feel right about it. They'll class you down. My mother used to say and my uncle they'll class you down. That's shows you don't have no respect for you older people and your own brother. That's the respect that they got among each other, and just a night few, I guess the ways back and my age and all the rest of em down, well I guess we
