

(When you were camped over here, would you be living there the year around or just part of the time?)

Year around we stayed right there.

(Who were some of the other people that were camped there?)

Oh, there was a lot of people--there was Little Ravens, and people named Flint, and there was Bigheads--there was quite a few that camped there--Hoof. I can't think of more--

(Did you cook for anyone else besides your husband?)

No. No. They had their own women to cook for them.

(Where were his folks living at this time--your husband's?)

They all passed away. Both of us didn't have no folks.

(What about your aunt and your uncle, Coal Fire--whatever happened to them?)

Well, they stayed at their home. They lived there until they passed away.

(Did their kids inherit that place?)

Yeah. And Walter Fire and Jim Fire, and Esther--they inherit that, but they already sold it. It's done been sold long time (ago).

RELATIONS WITH IN-LAWS

(Did you ever live with your mother-in-law and father-in-law?)

No. I didn't live with them.

(You never lived around your parents-in-law?)

No, I never did. I married this man when his father was already gone. Then after we got married his mother died about a month after. So we didn't have no folks to live by.

(I thought you told me one time your mother-in-law helped you babysit with your kids--who was that, then?)

It's his aunt.

MYRTLE'S VIEW THAT ELEMENTARY FAMILIES SHOULD LIVE APART FROM OTHER FAMILIES, ETC.

(Well, did you ever live close to them or with them?)

No. She used to just take my kids. You know, after I learn and see how a person should live, I never did believe in living with another family. I used to think that they wouldn't get along if they lived that way, and I told my husband that we had
