

"grandmother" and "grandfather" too--)

Yeah, you could.

(Would it make a difference as far as the way you felt towards these people whether it was really your mother's mother or whether it was maybe one of her sisters or someone like that? I mean, were there certain grandmothers you might be closer to than others?)

I had feeling for all of them. I don't think there's any difference.

(How is a mother supposed to be with her son? Does she talk much with him?)

Yeah, they do. They talk to them just like--

(Is there anything that maybe a mother and her son couldn't talk about--or could they joke or anything like that?)

Oh, they might joke a little, but they don't joke with their mothers.

(Would a man feel like he could discuss anything personal with his mother? Come out and talk it over with her?)

Yeah, yeah.

(I was just wondering if he'd be more inclined to confide in his father on certain things than with his mother?)

Yeah, they could talk things over.

(How about a father and his daughter--how are they supposed to treat each other?)

Well, the girls just know they got a father, that's all. They don't talk much with their daughters. They really have a respect for their girls.

(Do they show this in some way--ever?)

Well, they just don't like to say things in front of them, or tell them things that ain't supposed to be known--

(Would a mother ever maybe feel that way towards her son--where she wouldn't want to say certain things in front of him?)

Sure, they do.

(What about with a grandparent--would you ever feel like there's certain things you shouldn't say in front of your grandparents?)

Yeah.

(What kind of things?)
