

(Amos Toahty?) (Pause). O. K. Alfritch, next on the program a special has been requested honoring a young man who was killed in an accident. He was in the Marine Corps. He was a grandson of Mrs. Rosie Whitethunder, also the son of Mrs. Blossom Youngbear and a stepson of yours truly. At this time we're going to ask you to sing a song in memory of Richard Tallbear, the oldest son that we have. (Song is sung. After the song, Clinton is counting the money that has been contributed to the giveaway by friends and relatives. Rosie is talking to Roy Nightwalker. The flag and the picture are on the TV table near speaker's stand. People who danced give money to Rosie at end of dance.)

Roy: Now the flag here that was drawn around the dancing floor here was given to the late Mr. Tallbear for the service that he has rendered in the armed forces. And the grandma here says that that's the only thing she's got to remember her grandson. And this hall you see here was put on Rosie Whitethunder's place. I think she had given this to her grandchildren. But they left it back to her to make the decision for this hall to be put on here. And thinking that her grandchildren could be happy when an occasion like this would come--they would come out here and enjoy themselves. And that's why she wanted to have this hall put here. And this flag was given to the parent--the mother of this boy here. We all know how this boy left the earth to go beyond. But the grandma here is to carry on. Calling Daisy Behan. You've been given a table--a setting of table in memory of Richard. Also calling Mary Haag. (Woman coming to receive the gift passes her hand in front of the picture. Then she lulus as she walks away. Jess doesn't tell me the significance of the hand-passes--just says she gets a whole table of goods and that the day's meeting is serious--any other time
