

(What about Sam's daughter, Alice. Does she have any children? Wait a minute-- I mean Marcellina.)

Marcellina? She has a daughter in Dallas. And she has a son, too, in the army.

(What's her husband's name?)

Tompahodl. I forgot his first name but his last name is Tompahodl (tóp'w'hd1). That's Marcellina's husband. He's a silversmith. He's dead now. He makes pretty earrings and brooches and bracelets.

(Going back to your father's brothers--what about James Ahtone, this youngest brother. Did he have children?)

Yes. James married to a daughter of a man by the name of Little George-- 'Ém'w' t'w-- his daughter. Her name is 'd'k'w' t'e.

INDIAN CAMP BEDS

(What does that mean?)

You know when the Indians had tipi, they had--not a spring (bedspring) but they got lots of willows about a little bigger than this pencil--about four feet long, and they set them up on-- They put two poles in there and they put a pole across there and then they lay this 'o'k'w'te on top. On top of those poles. See, it be green poles on forks, going across--level. They put the 'o'k'w'te on top, and part of it--and it's painted. Looks like a spring (Bedspring). They they made a pallet on top of that. Make a bed. To keep from laying on the floor. They build it as high as this table. Them poles stick in the ground and they put a pole across and then another pole across, and then they lay that 'o'k'w'te on top. Them little slats. They just be like slats-- they're sewed together, this way, with cord.
