

people know him by Harry Hokeah instead of Sun Boy. Just the Indians call him Sun Boy. But his Agency enrollment name is Harry Hokeah. That's the same man--Harry Hokeah and Sun Boy. I always call him Sun Boy. Daisy Hokeah is the one he deserted--that's Jack's and Alice's mother. She died. Hokeah's got a girl living now--Sally Hokeah Bointy. Sally Bointy. At Carnegie.

COMMENTS ON DRAWING NO. 94: AGENT BLACKMON

(Is there anything to say about this one here (Drawing No. 94) Under that it says "Agent Blackmon die.")

Well, that's the winter he died, I guess. I told you how Blackmon died--he took appendicitis and they took him to El Reno hospital. They didn't have no hospital them days in Anadarko. So El Reno was the nearest hospital they had. And there he died under the operation. Said they operated and remove his appendix and he never did come to.

(Do you have anything to say about this picture (Drawing No. 94) Can you make out what that picture might represent?)

You might just say that the picture represents a white man. It don't represent a Indian--it represents a white man. That's about all I could make out of it.

(What is it about it that makes you think it represents a white man?)

Well, he's got a hat on. And his overcoat. He wasn't Agent too long. Then he taken sick. But he's been Chief Clerk there for about twenty years or fifteen years, before he became Agent. And he was the first civilian Agent. Most all the Agents before him was Army Officers. The government sent nothing but Army officers to be Agents. He was the first civilian Agent. He was put in because of a congressional act, I think, and from that time they commenced to using civilians. Well, the one that succeeded him was W. B. McCowan and he was from the educational department in Washington, D. C. He was a civilian.
