

trying to get him out, but he didn't get out. I remember. My dad used to ask me to write to him while he was in prison, trying to cheer him up.

(Did he stay there very long?)

About three years. Three years before they let him out. Well, we don't know for positive which one it is, but that's about the closest I could get to either one. The blocks are either representing the allotment or else Bert behind the bars.

COMMENTS ON DRAWING NO 92: STORY OF COMANCHE GIRL WHO WAS KILLED

(What about this next picture here--(Drawing No. 92)--Underneath it says "Comanche Girl found Dead.")

Yeah. It was in the fall. Now this boy was to be her husband--her lover. And it was the fall--September payment--the Indians were having a payment. Down there in the bottom on the Washita River where these Indians were always gambling, in the bottom. Well, there was a pond on the west end. It was a slough pond. And on the south side of the pond in the brushes was where all the gambling was going on. And on top of the ridge over here was an Indian camp of all tribes. Maybe a thousand tipis--camped. And they camped there for months. And they gamble down there. And the government pay lease money and annuity money all at one time. Sometimes there's fifty dollars apiece and sometimes seventy-five dollars apiece, and sometimes a hundred dollars apiece. So these Indians had no business on their home, so they just stay in camp there and gamble and go to town. Gamble, and drink. And this boy--they're both Comanche--I attended school with both of them. This boy is supposed to be Phillip. This girl is named Edna. Well, Edna was found dead. And they didn't know who it was. Well, after he killed her--after Phillip kill her--Edna over there--before morning--it happened about eleven or twelve o'clock in the night. And after twelve he went up there in town and he busted a window, maybe on purpose. And they put him in jail. They put Phillip in Jail. The next day this girl was found dead. And they all--the United States marshals and all the police and city police
