

the land where the Scalp hanging at the top. And way back there when the Kiowa warriors come back. That's exactly what they do. The ladies, their wives, their daughters, grand-daughters, and so forth, and they would take the enemy's scalp and tie them to the end of the lance. They would dance the Scalp Dance. So, I will inform you people that we before we forget they take medicine, and (Interpretation) of the Kiowa dancers. This is the Scalp Dancer. All the dance is by the women folks, the Kiowa Tribe.

(The Scalp Dance is continued for about a minute.)

Let's have some more Scalp dancers. The harder you dance, the cooler you get. So everybody dance, everybody dance. When you're sitting there, you're sweating; but when you move around, you can feel the breeze, cool breeze, like a cool cigarette.

(The song continues for a few seconds and is interrupted.)

We like to have some of you ladies to volunteer and boys and girls, we like to (Not clear).

VICTORY DANCE AND COMMENTS

(Another song begins.)

All right, this is the Victory Dance, Victory Dance. As you notice, they are sort of round dancing counter-clockwise. This is the Victory Dance. The other was the Scalp Dance. This is the Victory, Victory Dance, called the Victory Dance. Follows by the (not clear) later on in the program.

(The Victory Dance is continued for about three minutes)

(Lee Motah has said that this Victory Dance is, if you can do it, it's a victory over rheumatism and over a sickness.)

(After a few seconds, the announcer says a couple of sentences in Indian language, and the song is continuously sung with the announcer singing along with the singers for a few seconds.)

That was a good one. Hey-y-y-y (The song ends), that was real good. Those words were pretty strong. (long pause) That was the second version of the Victory Dance. Now, the third version is coming up next. But I think--get some water to the singers. Where's the water boy?

Unidentified voice: We got some water for you boys.

(not clear) Yes, (name not clear) That's where the men or singers are taking a break drinking. Once again, I want to call your
