S-T-I double L. Still. She's another widow.

SCHOOL--PARKHILL AND PRESBYTERIAN MISSION

You might still want to talk about Parkhill, I was well known then. I lived in Parkhill with my Uncle, turns out that he is old now, but Parkhill (Interrupted). We attended the Parkhill school.

He was in school for educated. It was Presbyterian school.

(What were some of the subjects they had back then in school? Do any of you recall?)

They had good old honest-to-God first grade, second, and on up. They didn't tell them what you wanted to take, did you, just like our female seminary. They had a list for you to go by and that's what you went by. And when you finished you knew you know something. Now, you're afraid.

(Did you have to take Latin, Jo Anna?)

No, I didn't go that far.

(You didn't go that far?)

No, I didn't.

Well, I just didn't learn Latin myself, so I quit school.

And we quit school, you know, and we didn't go back.

(Reading, writing, and arithmetic.)

Reading, writing, and arithmetic.

Yes, over here at the Presbyterian Mission.

They had good teachers too.

(You told us one of the names. Can you recall any more?)

Yes, Mrs. Russell, was the one I stayed with. But Ella knows some of the teachers, the older ones.

Mrs. Matthews and Mrs. Evans.

(Mrs. Evans, was she Cherokee?)

No, they were all white and all from the East. Missionaries.
