

Yeah, and his wife is over yonder, his son, and his grandson, is over yonder.

(And he was a judge?)

Yeah, he was a judge in the nation.

(Not clear)

No, no that was Emila, Emila Balwin, that Dean's wife. Claims says she wants to be buried over here by her son. And I said, well, she won't know where they are gonna put her when she died. Her kids should have put her over here.

((Not clear))

Hayley, Hayley way back yonder.

(1883!)

(Interruption. '83. (not clear))

1848, over a hundred years ago. Now that stone there (name not clear) whose wife has been made (not clear) they were gonna put her in the National Cemetery. But her sister-in-law talk and they just leave it here. And he died in '39, 1939. So that all got to be fixed over, made over there by the Frisco Train Crossing back in '31. I hear that on the _____ and this one over here, that one over there. She married John, who is the son of that man (not clear) son, for his mother. And this, his sister. Her own mother, (not clear) her mother that they claimed (not clear), her great-grandmother (not clear).

(Was it Mrs. Jones that was run over by a train?)

Frisco Train back there in '31. I was making the beds, and fixing to go to work, when I hear it. I lived in Muskogee, my son was started school there at Muskogee. Her mother lived across the river, so they walk over on this trussel, you know. A bridge you know. Railroad bridge, you know.
