

they come to this tripe, so they have to cut it up. And different ones wanted certain part of the tripe. Different ones wanted certain part of the lungs. And they got mad. "Well, they won't give us that part, so we're going to go over there and eat with them people!" Then after they run out of that, these people, they got sore at one another because they wasn't given preference to be cut up individually (the internal parts), because it wasn't large enough to over a hundred people or more. So that one bunch got mad and said, "We're going to go off down here a ways down the river and we're going to cook up our own food." Well, right there is where the ill feelings had accumulated among themselves. So this one tribe decided that they wouldn't go back to this tribe. They said, "Well, they won't feed us what they got there, so let's just go on down further." So that left this one bunch camping down there--and the northern Arapahoes, they just drifted up north till they landed in the state of Wyoming, and after the southern tribe was being residing in Colorado, they got tired of waiting for their relatives to come back, so they also drifted on down south. They would be looking for them.
