

no money there. Unless they show the money, they got money in the bank, you can enter. Like this old lady here, she's got a bunch of boys, she draws pension, and they enter her here. That's the way it is. They just don't take the Indians unless they got money. I don't think they ever taken anybody...My aunt died there, but I know she had money.

(What about the clinic here in town. How does it work? Is it pretty helpful?)

I think they pretty nice, but the only thing, we don't never have a doctor. You know, like clinics that have a doctor right there to wait on you. That's the only thing, the only objection that I have. They're good in every way. If I want medicine, I have to go in the morning. I have to sign my name, and I have to wait there until the town doctor comes over at ten o'clock, or maybe eleven. I have to wait on him. And sometimes there's a lot of us, boy they hold us until maybe 1 o'clock. I know, they did that. The other day, I went over. The only thing I was after was my diabetic medicine, I got low. I can get medicine there, any time. Instead of going to Lawton hospital where I been treated all the time, I go there. And I went there, and the same diabetic doctor was here. He had come from Lawton in the morning. I was surprised, so was he. And I told him. He said, what can I do for you. I said, well, I gotta have medicine, I don't have enough to run me till the thirtieth. He looked at me, and said, we don't have a thing here. It's all down there. I said, well let it go. I got another bottle with a little in it. Sometimes I leave my medicine here, well I got another one there. I'll call my son-in-law, they can bring it. So I called him, and that evening they came, and brought my medicine.

(How often do they have the clinic?)

They have it every day, all but Saturday. But they have certain days, diabetic days. And they have certain days for babies. And certain days for those that are waiting, expecting. But when they get through, anybody can be waited on. Now in the morning, doctor's gone in the afternoon, you go there, well, we can't give you anything because the doctor's got to say yes or no.
