

Well, that part just came up, looks like. And we get together and talk about, if there's any tribal business. But that's what that is. It's the same as when the chiefs used to call on meetings, you know. And we don't have any chiefs anymore, all the chiefs died out. And the younger generation's supposed to take the places of their fathers, you know. So, we don't have no chiefs. And that Sadoke boy, the one he got, well, it's mostly our tribal business, you know. Like this Riverside school land, and all that. They make reports, how much money came in, and how much went out. That's just about all.

(Somebody told me that the tribal council was trying to start a housing project? Have you ever heard about that?)

No. I didn't go to the last two meetings. I think. Something came up I couldn't go. This last time, they had election of officers. I wanted to go so bad. Something came up...no, I was at Pawnee. I sure wanted to be there.

(Who is the chairman now?)

I don't really know, but I heard...somebody said...we had our same officers, so I guess it's the same ones. They been doing pretty good.

RELOCATION PROGRAM, SOME EFFECTS, GOOD AND BAD

(Another thing I wanted to ask you about is this relocation project that the office started up. Has that worked out?)

Well, I guess it would work out...but like I said, we have so many drunkards. Some get in there, and try to do something, and they quit. Now, my grandson went on that relocation. He's going to school in San Jose, or ...That's where he's at. He's going to school there. That's where my daughter and them going. Well, they went in a hurry. He got his notice, just that quick. And he didn't even have time to pack up. And that's his car, this one here. And his father told him, that car might not make it. My son-in-law's a mechanic, he knows. He asked his father, daddy, you think the car will make it. I don't think it will. He said, well you going away for a year, we can park your car down there at your grandma's. That's why they're here.

We use this once in a while. That old...that's his old one. He told me, why don't you ride that car and go to church.
