

they had a meeting over at Big Bend. Then he brought over the minutes and I typed them out. I have a copy of them somewhere because he said you might have to have that for later reference. If you work on the work that I was doing you know. So then that's how come I know. See my husband didn't belong to that Moonhead clan, even though he was his uncle, but he belonged to the..and ..was his mother's first cousin so that he just drifted to that.

(Did he ever give any reason? Did he ever say that he liked one better than the other?)

Well, it's just preference, that's all. (Tape runs out for a few minutes)
It's always a memorial dinner for four successive years after a departed. Then that's when they have those meetings.

(Do they have it on the same day that someone died?)

Yes, uhuh.

(And then they have every four years after that?)

Uhuh.. It's always 6 days according..well, that would be pertaining to the death rituals. We'd have to cover that under a different subject.

So that's what they have. On special occasions, they don't have them just any time.

(Are there any other occasions other than memorial meetings for people that have died?)

No, just like I say, just for birthdays and memorials, that's about all they have them for.

(What about holidays such as the fourth of July? Days like that.)

Well, some of them do but not all. Just a very very few.)

(Do people usually say what the reasons for a meeting are?)

Yes, they always give the reason.
