

said. He's taking all his clothes. And--well, this White Man took his pants off and he put it on again and then he tie it right here. He walked around. He said, "Well, he's just got a gun, now. He's got this scabbard on--gun." And then he walk up to this horse. He just look at that White Man. He's just got that gun, now. I'm going to take it, too, and run off now!" And then he went to this horse again and done something again and this horse says, "Whhhhhh!" He go like that and he just jump way off. "Hey, I ain't got no gun--that's why!" Well, he took it off again and he put it on there and then this White Man was holding the horse like that. And then he was naked! You know, he ain't got nothing on! And he's standing there--like a rabbit, I guess--a skinny rabbit! And then he got on that horse. "Now I'm going to--" "A little ways!" he said--this white man. "A little ways and you come back." "Yeah, I'll come back--little ways!" Well, after he got little ways--I don't know how far, you know--well, he whipped this horse and that horse run with him. "Hey! Indian! Come back, Coyote! He just chase him, but he can't catch him--he's gone! He says, "That's the way I cheat anybody!" That's what his story is, you know. That's the Coyote's story. "And nowadays," he said, "Way in the front of me, you all tell your children and your grandchildren and my story, it's just keep going on. All these stories what I got, they're going to just keep going on to generation to generation." That's what this Coyote said. And that's the end of it.

That's what the Coyote told his story, like that. That's why now, from that time, this way they say--Indians, they say, "White Man cheats Indians now." That's what the story is. It's true, you know.
