

all right there. They got it now up there in Norman, or in Oklahoma City. But, anybody that didn't claim their dead, you know, they'd take 'em over there and they'd butcher you--butchering a hog. (laughter) I remember, I didn't see it, but I was over there directly after it happened. Some little boy went over there and him and his mother or some of 'em or his daddy. And they was eatin' supper and he was talking it and they butchered "Nigger" and they got some "Spike names" out of him or something--staple detrart. (?) and some feller, some of these students dropped this Nigger's urine in his pocket. And he run his hand down his pocket and felt something and pulled out that Nigger urine eatin' supper. Yeah, they butchered 'um over there jest like they butchered hogs--them crazy. But I guess it brought around medical students. I guess it's a good thing. People wouldn't claim 'em and it didn't hunt 'em and when they was buidn some--did you remember when they was buidding some of them building some of them buildings over there 'bout digging up people's bones? They want to diggin' up bones and they didn't know what in the world it was--thought there's been a grave yard there. They had where they took dummies out and buried them. You know them students. Took 'em out and buried 'em there on the campus there in Norman. I read that when I--few years ago. I don't know jest how many years it's been. They got to digging it up, you know, and the damn students go there and get them crazies and then take all the meat off the bone and (?) (unintelligible) you ought to go up to Oklahoma City and they might help you. And they got glass vats and one old boy from here was there and he was made a doctor. He wanted to come home Christmas, and this old fellow he had, he was to long to go in that bat. They had to cut his leg off up here. They cut his head off and wrapped it up in formildihide.
