

Well I tell you--it's not no Arapaho.

(It says "Watan.")

Oh, yeah. That's Philip Watan's father. That's right. He was the first Indian preacher they had. Yes. And they used to all be afraid of him.

(How come?)

I don't know. They don't know about preaching, you know.

(How did you say his name in Arapaho?)

wá'táen

(What does that mean?)

That means "black".

(Now this one say, "Arapaho Sun Dancers at Wind River.")

Oh yeah. Wyoming people. I don't know them.

(This says "Little Bird's favorite room.")

Little Bird. Chief Little Bird. Oh, my goodness! My! My grandpa! (exclamation on seeing picture of Sitting Bull) My goodness! See, Ghost Dance--You didn't believe me--my grandpa brought that Ghost Dance. That's my grandpa. Wish I could talk to him like I used to. Everything I'd say--"Grandpa, grandpa, grandpa," -- "nebé'siwá" -- Even when I'm going to put my shoes on I used to say né' b'é' siwá And who is this one--he's a peyote man?

(It says "Cleaver Warden.")

Yeah! That's him! Jimmy Warden's father. That's him. I just now recognize him.

(He was an interpreter, wasn't he?)

He was interpreter. And my brother-in-law, Frank Harrington, was interpreter. But he's not on there. Gosh, I'm glad I seen my grandpa.

(This one is "Beef Issue Day at Cantonment". See, here's the pens and horses and lot of people.)

That's right over here (north of her house). These were on the hill over here. And this is where they used to turn cows out.

"This is your cow." And then the one they call used to have to kill his cow. It was right over here where this dam is. And right behind in there, that's where all them soldiers that used to live over here were buried. And they remove them. I think
