

(Why?)

Well, these people that live close by said that these Indians that come out there make too much noise and they're always disturbing the peace. But everytime somebody goes out there and parks, they catch 'em for disturbing the peace.

(Well, who complains?)

The man that lives close by there, he said that he has things planted there and there's beer cans, pop bottles all over the place and they're destroying his crop. So they have the laws to move 'em.

(Where will they dance this year? Do you think they'll still try the same places or somewhere else?)

Most likely they'll try, but they won't get very far. They'll probably pick out some other places that will be new to them.

(Well, when you said that the laws come by and they take people in, well, they can't get everybody, can they?)

No, they'll catch a few though. They'll hold a few.

(They do. What do they take them in for?)

For disturbing the peace.

(I see. How long do they have to stay in jail?)

Until they pay their fines. They usually stick 'em a heavy fine.

(What kind of fines do they usually give?)

A $42.00 fine.

(Forty-two dollars!)

$42.00

(And what if they can't pay it?)

Well, they'll have to serve their time out in the city or county jail.

(How much time would that be?)

Well, in the city, it's a dollar a day, and in the county, it's two for one.

(Two days for a dollar?)

Uh-huh.
