

said, "No, I'm going to try." And he didn't have no arrows. He had these buffalo ribs. That's what he had. He had four of them. And that's what he used for arrows. So he got ready. And he got them ready. And everybody gathered. And all that time Sainday was already in their midst there and he said, "Boy--" He already had it in his mind that as quick as it dropped he would pick it up and tell them, "I'm the one that killed it-- knocked it down." So this boy shot the first time. It kinda went right close. The second time the same way. The third time it hit that nest. It kind of rock it. Fourth time, sure enough, it hit it and knocked it down. So he done picked it up you know. And that boy went over there and he got that arrow. And went over there. He told that man, he said, "Hey, I knocked it down." And Sainday said, "Well, me too. I knocked it down." So that night--why anyway that man said, "Well my daughter is over there in that tipi," and he said, "Go ahead. Just go on over there. You're her husband," he said. So this boy went in there, you know. And he said, "Well, your daddy said--I come to marry you. I knocked that nest down that your daddy wanted." And he said, "We're going to get married. You're my wife." So she was laying in bed and she said, "Well come on. Lay down." That lady said that. So this little boy--this young boy--went and got in bed. Pretty soon here comes Sainday and he said, "Hey, that's the wrong boy!" He said, "He's no good. You know what they call him? They always call him 'Dried-up Snot,'" he said, "He's no good. I'm the real man that knocked that nest down," he said, "I'm supposed to marry you." And that girl said, "No. This one is the one. You--you are nothing! You're just Sainday!" she told him. So he didn't get to marry that girl that time. (Another segment of T-71 played. Able occasionally speaks in English.)
