

Some of them, maybe, they match the arrows, you know, some of them.

(Yeah, yeah.)

Just some of them, you know.

(Yeah. Did they--did they have a score?)

No. Yeah, they have a--they score when they hit that target.

(I mean, did some--somebody keep score?)

Yeah, when one, you know, hits in there, but--I just wouldn't know, you know, where--but I know they have a stick, you know, about that big.

(Yeah.)

Just stick it in the ground. And I think the target's right there.

(Yeah.)

I don't know where they put it in the ground.

(Yeah.)

Well, let me just get over little bit now. Kinda talking about arrows-- nineteen---

(Mmmm-hmmm.)

---when they had that World's Fair down here at St. Louis. Was it 1906?

(Gee, I don't know.)

Well, they had a World's Fair there. There was a bunch of Wichitas went there. My dad, he went, his brothers.

(Yeah.)

People came around, well, they had that grass house, lodge.

(Yeah.)

People come around there. People, I guess, they had money, you know. And they come out there, and my other uncle was there, you know. He had arrows, you know. They set a probably dollar piece or fifty cents piece or quarter. One of them hit it, you know.
