

Yeah, fringe.

(Fringe?)

Yeah, typically Caddo, and the men wore those little round earrings like I have. That's what I wanted to show you. In those old pictures you'd get a better understanding. I have them but I don't know just where I put them.

(What about those aprons? Is there supposed to be any special way that you wear the apron?)

Well, that was an old introduction from the French women. Grandma said in the older days, they didn't wear them long. They just wore them below the knee. And they always had fancy leggings put on there, you know. They'd have a little ruffle all decorated and with embroidery or either some part of a shell. You know, they used a lot of that.

(How long is the apron supposed to be today?)

Even with the dress.

(Is it supposed to be any special color?)

No, it just depends on who the individual is. How they make them and so on.

(What about mocassins? Do the Caddo ever wear those long mocassins?)

No. They're always...see this the woodland type of mocassin. All the woodland Indians wear those. Soft-soled mocassins as they're called. All one piece.

(Are these the ones with the flaps?)

Uhuh. Yes. Yeah with the flaps.

(What about leggings? Do people wear leggings?)

Yes, they wore leggings.

(Would that be appropriate to wear today?)
