

I give them to them Christmas time. Lots of boys. Last Christmas I made about sixteen sets. And it's hard work. (Unintelligible) off Bois D'Arc bows and sinew thread and eagle feathers. And I aim to make some more this time.

(Are these wing feathers?)

Huh?

(These feathers here, are these wing feathers?)

Yeah, these are wing feathers. But if I can't get no Golden Eagle tail feathers, I'm going to send these to those women that wanted them. I want to put red tip. I wanted blue red tip in there like-- like the Indians use them, and then put them back here and wear them here like that.

(What kind of feathers do they use for the red tip?)

Down eagle feathers. Oh, now, some of them--you can find a lot of that dyed--different colored dyed feathers in Kresses. I don't know if they're rooster feathers or chicken feathers. But after they dyed you don't know whether they eagle feathers or rooster or whatever they are. They put them on their hair. Lots of people don't question where they come from, they just use them because-- (You know, I'd like to go on and talk about birds the rest of this, you know, till we quit. I've noticed, lately I've seen a number of fans that seem like they're made out of parrot feathers.)

Made out of what?

(Parrot feathers.)

Yes.

(When did they start using parrot feathers?)

You carry that home.

(Oh, thank you.)
