

He said, "I almost forgot my bag." He took off. This white man just wondered, you know. He done that three times. Every time he'd come back in and get that bag, and every time he went to see them they had fresh meat. And he just began to want to get hold of this secret where he got that meat. He couldn't hunt. He was a little bit too old. And then one night he came right close before he scared the Indians. And he got right up close to his tipi and he hollered, "Hmmm, hmmm, hm, hmmm." Started pounding on that drum. This man took off, but the owl was too close. He didn't have time to come back and get his bag. And he just left it. And this white man went in there and got the bag. Must of been almost morning because he was still examining it when it was daylight. Then he opened it. Soon as he opened it, he'd kind of jump out--this buffalo. He shot him-- Well, he didn't kill it. He just wandered. Then he done that again. Another one jumped out. And he said, "So this is where he gets all his meat!" Well, he killed that second one. He went after his family and they just moved in, because this family just moved off and they left everything. They moved in there. And he said, "Now, I'm rich now. I'm going to get anything I want. So I'm going to this--" There was a big Indian camp not too far from there. And he told his wife to stay there. Then he went to this big camp. And he went to the chief. Told him he was going to perform magic. Well, there were hungry. They couldn't find no buffaloes. They were just moving from place to place. And this man knew it. So he took this bag over there. He told them to all get ready, that he was going to turn buffalo loose where they could get plenty to eat. So they made a big ring, these men. He said, "First I'm going to marry the chief's daughter." So they told him that after he gave them all what he promised them, they'd let marry the chief's daughter. So they prepared a tipi and after he performed this miracle, he was going to move in with his new
