

there that they exchange with us. What we wore over- they took - then they put something back on us to wear home. And then we had a - - 'course they had this ceremony there - wedding ceremony - had a preacher. And I believe that preacher - can't remember for sure, - I'm afraid to say for sure, - I don't know whether it was Catholic wedding or whether it was this preacher from Friends Indian Church, at Hominy, - I can't remember. If I had more time to think I might remember, but right off hand I don't remember, - but anyways, - they had this ceremony. And they had a feast. They laid - they spread their table there for the bridesmaids. We were all in a circle there so they spread this table there and they had brought in food. And each relative on the boy's side - the groom's side had food, for their own bridesmaid, and they sit a little place there for her. And then, of course, they had other food there too on the table. And ah - then they come in with the - just before the dinner - well - before the ceremony - after they get the bridesmaids dressed - well - the bride walks in. And he comes in with his brother, it's always usually his brother or - or - first cousin, that he calls brother. And there's - I don't remember what - how many there was of them, I know that he had one full brother, apparently he was one of them, but I don't remember how many more. Like I said, I was just a girl and didn't pay too much attention. And really - I haven't even thought too much about it over the years. And ah - and we ah, - they brought them in and they sit them down, beside the bride and then the other men that come with him are seated with one of the other brides. So that's what I remember about this Indian wedding. And after the - wedding dinner, well we were all permitted to go home - come home - except the bride, she stays all night over there. And early the
