

now, though. You know, pull one of those little peppers off, and bite into it. It's probably hot.

(Around the leaves?)

Around the little seeds there. Think they look like seeds you call it. A lot of people gather that seed to feed parakeets and canaries. But when we use it, we just chop the whole things up in salad. And, of course, this (unintelligible.) This is lettuce too, see. You can't eat it after it gets that big. See. And over here is some wild onions. See if I can find any of 'em. It's about time for 'em to all die out. See, they look near like this grass, that you can't tell. I guess they just died. Oh, there was a mess of them here in all this grass - - maybe one, I'm not sure - - nope that's grass. They little bitty onion bulb on them. Now there ah - - they usually grow around where there's seepage in the ground. You know, quite a bit of moisture. And when the moisture is gone, the onion is gone. 'Course that lamb quarter, it's not gettin' any water there. It isn't much good. You can still eat that. It's good around here, that lamb quarter. Well, when it's cooked, it tastes like spinach. I know lots of people that eat it and never knew the difference. I don't know, there's somethin' else I had wrote on here - - and of course I showed you the poke greens. And the dandelions are gone. You know what I mean - - It's like the lettuce, it's gone to seed now. And then there's - - I guess the wild - - now sheep shower, I don't know, I can't spell worth anything. But you ever hear it.

(No, Ma'm?)

Well, it's a little bit dry now. I'll ask Sandy come - - if they eat it, they should know where it's - - two or three different types of sheep showers.

(Sheep Shower?)

Sheep shower. And then some kids called it sours. It makes a very delicious wine,
