

there was fat with it, with meat, big pieve of meat. He took it and says, "I'll eat it first." She said, "Then you can eat it if you want to eat it." So he said - they went ahead and they start eating it. Start eating it and they got full and there was good spring water coming through there, that brook. They got cold water and they drunk it. And they rested there. They saved some, you know, to, to eat again. So they, they stayed there for few days at that little place before they were going back, you know. They had long ways to go. So as they, they stayed there - they went ahead and uh - wait around and they were singing, you know. Thinking maybe they should be telling what they, what they want, what they come for, what reason. So he laid there, you know, and finally he couldn't get no kind of an answer from nowhere. So they said, they decided what little meat they had there, well, they save a little of it. So they eat more and had good kind of fresh water. So when they, they left from there, from there they started on their way. And they got way down there somewhere in the valley. Somewhere there, you know, and finally they seen a deer, they seen a deer. They, the old man said, "I'm gonna," said, "I'm gonna sneak up on him and I'm gonna get him." He said, "We've got to eat." So he said he start walkin' over there and he said he walk awful slow, you know, so that deer couldn't hear him. So he run and he got pretty close to range where he could go ahead and shoot him. So he shot him and he killed him. So his wife jumped up and went over there to butcher him. They butchered him and they made their camp there. Made their camp there for about a week, right there at that place. And finally he said, that while they were there, he said, there was - they were pretty well, place where they were, they couldn't be seen. The only thing they could see, well they could smell that meat cooking. And he said, went ahead and butchered him and un - cooked him and eat him. They had a good feast and they rested up good. And
