

There was plenty of game, plenty of food, and then those big chiefs, they go by the hundreds. They all get together and they come way down into old Mexico. Back into Texas, what we call Texas now. Then days, they didn't have no Texas or Oklahoma or nothing. No names of nothing. They wasn't no white people in the whole United States. There wasn't no white people. So, they go up and they raid those Mexicans over there in old Mexico. They would raid them. And they would take a lot of things away from them. They'd drive horses back. They'd bring a lot of clothing back, what they find over there. What they find over there, they take it. And they killed a lot of them, and they came on back; come on back to their own country. And then times, he said they would go out somewhere, you know, into battle field among their own people. Indians and Indians, they fought. They fought that for many years, they fought one another. All the tribes fought one another, killed one another. Finally, he said time came where the Spaniards came into the western United States. They come in back in there. So, these Kiowas, they go on in there. Kiowas and Kiowa-Apaches, they go on in there, down in there and they would have a big war with them Spanish. So, finally, they found out that those Indians, all those Navajo Indians and those Ute Indians back in there, they got friendly with the Spanish. So, they said when these Kiowas and Kiowa-Apaches that go down there to raid them, they would have a big battle and they noticed where they had big buildings. They didn't know what it was. But later they found out that it was big worship house. That they talk to a Great Spirit, they said. They talk to a Great Spirit. They say that it was a true spirit they talk to. So, they have big wars with those Spaniards and it went on for years later. Well, they said that after they raided those Spanish, they killed them and take their horses and take all their things that belong to the Spanish, take them away from them. And they take it back to their own country
